

Volume III, Issue 5 May 2008

Someone You Should Know

Photojournalist Paola Gianturco is a truly remarkable woman. She has traveled around the world to record the stories of women who are helping one another tackle the problems that darken their lives—domestic violence, sex trafficking, war, poverty, illiteracy, discrimination, inequality, malnutrition, disease. Their stories are recorded in her inspiring and powerful new book Women Who Light the Dark.

According to Paola, these women may lack material resources, but they possess a wealth of an even more precious resource: imagination. And their imaginations light the dark.

They produce plays, compose and perform poetry, turn on the music and start line dances, perform puppet shows, design post cards, stage street skits. And they use creative strategies. These women show us how to use our time, talent, resources, courage and creativity to cause change.

Paola is donating 100% of her royalties to the Global Fund for Women, an organization dedicated to promoting economic security, health, education, and leadership to women around the globe.

To learn more about the organization, visit: globalfundforwomen.org

To learn more about Paola and her project, go to womenwholightthedark.com

Visit tipscommunity.com for more articles about women entrepreneurs.